

Dawning
J. H. Carters

At the dawning of the morning, shades of night have passed away ;
Then the sun in all its splendor, brings to us the light of day.
The vital laws of Nature, every day and every hour,
Bring to us Nature's blessings and display her wondrous power.

When the light of day is ending, shades of night begin to fall;
Then from home and all our loved ones comes to us the welcome call.
Through the night we rest in slumber, weariness has passed away;
When the shades of night have vanished, then comes forth another day.

So at birth the light of life bursts forth on us in bright array;
Through life's day we journey upward, at life's night we pass away.
Then this flesh in Earth must slumber for its work on Earth is through;
Then we take another body and begin a life anew.
